Hall of Fame Selection Process

Phase Five

AI Overview

The non-athlete selection process for Hall of Fames involves nomination by a committee or a specific organization followed by evaluation based on approved criteria from the EHPC Members. Candidates are then typically voted on by the committee, sometimes with a required vote threshold, while the specific rules and categories vary significantly depending on the Hall of Fame.

Nomination

Candidates are often nominated by the EHPC Committee as well as outside individuals.

Selection process

- Committee review: Nominees are reviewed by the committees to narrow down the list.
- Voting: A final selection committee votes on the candidates.
- Voting thresholds: A specific percentage of votes, such as two-thirds or 75%, is often required for election.
- Ballot rotation: In some cases, candidates who are not elected can remain on a ballot for a month before being removed.

Performing Arts- Phase Four

Performing arts are art forms that use an artist's voice, body, or objects to express artistic ideas, emotions, and stories in front of a live or recorded audience. They are distinct from the visual arts, which involve the creation of static objects like paintings or sculptures.

The main disciplines generally fall into three broad categories:

- Theatre/Drama: The art of acting out stories in front of an audience, often using a combination of speech, gesture, music, and dance. This includes plays, musicals, opera, and puppetry.
- Dance: This involves ordered bodily movements, typically performed to music, to express a sentiment, mood, or narrative. It encompasses styles such as ballet, modern dance, hip-hop, and traditional forms.
- Music: An art form that combines pitch, rhythm, and dynamics to create sound. It can be performed using various instruments and styles (e.g., classical, jazz, pop) and can be vocal, instrumental, or a combination.

Other forms of performing arts include mime, spoken word, circus arts, and stand-up comedy. The performance, which takes place in a specific time and space, relies on the relationship between the performer and the audience to create a shared, dynamic experience.
